

Dr. Edgar O. Oviedo-Rondón is a Professor of Poultry Science, Nutrition and Data Analytics, and Extension Specialist in the Prestage Department of Poultry Science at North Carolina State University. He received his Veterinary degree from the University of Tolima in Colombia. Edgar obtained his M.S. in Animal Nutrition and Production in Brazil at the State University of Maringa, Ph.D. in Poultry Science at the University of Arkansas, and in 2018 an MBA from NC State University. Dr. Oviedo has experience in the poultry industry as a Veterinarian, Nutritionist, Extension Specialist, and Consultant in 32 countries. Dr. Oviedo's responsibilities include extension and research in broiler and broiler breeder nutrition and management, incubation, and data analytics. His research activities are related to feedstuff quality and processing, evaluation of feed additives, especially enzymes, mineral metabolism, intestinal health, avian bone, and muscle development and its impacts on locomotion and meat quality, incubation effects, and applications of data analytics and computer models. Dr. Oviedo is author or co-author of 105 peer-review publications in Scientific Journals, 334 Proceedings of International Meetings, 309 abstracts of presentations in Scientific Meetings of National and International level, 92 popular press articles, and 10 book chapters.